Dear hiring manager,

Hello! My name is Ethan and I am a programmer currently based out of Detroit, Michigan. In March of this year, I graduated from Michigan State University's full-stack web development bootcamp where I learned the ins-and-outs of JavaScript and to create full-stack applications using MongoDB, Express, React, Node, and Heroku, among other technologies. While attending this program, I was able to make a plethora of different applications, including three full-stack applications where I mastered working with both the frontend and backend. Although I only decided to make a career change into tech this past year, I have been interested in computers and coding for a majority of my life. I'm truly excited and passionate about putting these skills I have honed into action by taking a position with your company.

Since completing MSU's program, I have spent my time learning different JavaScript frameworks, such as React Native for mobile development, as well as beginning a Udemy course on C#. I have also collaborated with a few local restaurants, such as Street Beet Detroit, to improve their websites, train the owners on how to properly update them, and assisted in the setup and connectivity of point-of-sale and online ordering systems. I am now committed to finding a position with where I hope to both expand my knowledge as well as to take the leap from working on small-scale applications to collaborating closely with a team on something larger! I pride myself on my ability to learn and adapt to any situation thrown at me, as well as my strong social skills required to work as an optimal team member.

Thank you so much for reviewing my information and I look forward to your response.

Best regards,

Ethan McDowell
